Britt-Marie Thurén: Making barrios, making persons. Grass roots politics and gendered change in urban Spain

To the memory of my mother Stina

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

A million thanks to all those who have helped make this study possible! They are many! Scientific work is always a collective effort, and anthropology even more so because we work directly with human beings.

My fondest gratitude is for the many movement activists in all six towns and cities, too many to list. They gave of their time and energy to help me see and understand during fieldwork. Thank you all for countless and inspiring discussions, for giving me access to archives, for supplying me with facts, for letting yourselves be interviewed, for inviting me for lunch... I hope that you will remember my visits as something more than a bothersome interruption of your work and that you realize that my gratitude is sincere.

Very special thanks to the members of the neighborhood association of Benimaclet, Valencia. They have had more than their share of my curiosity over many years and yet they continue answering my questions and opening the doors of the association for me without showing any impatience.

Special thanks to Amparo Arce for sharing so much of her work, knowledge and worries with me.

Special thanks to Jesús Bermejo, widower of Pilar Navarro, for letting me use her words under her real name.

Special thanks to Julia Arjona, always there with practical support whenever I need it.

Special thanks to the Town Hall representatives of Elda, Linares, Vigo and Cordova, who gave me access to municipal statistics and other documents.

To Carmen, Nuria, Mary Luz, Laura, Mati and Encarna, who have given me permission to use their stories, along with the many others who gave me long personal interviews, and who must all remain anonymous, my heartfelt thanks.

And most special thanks to the original group of Valencian activists who planned the project together with me: Julia Arjona, Rosa Ibáñez and Cristina Verdugo. Thank you for the inspiration, the creativity, the wild ideas, your work with the preparations and last but not least for all the fun we had during our meetings.

Thank you to all the friends, colleagues and movement activists who have read parts of the manuscript commenting and correcting details: Susanne Gustafsson, José López Cadenas, Jaime López Thurén, Ingrid Oeveraas, Kerstin Sundman, Louise Thurén, Cristina Verdugo, Vicenta Verdugo. And to other friends, colleagues, movement activists and some who are not movement activists but who have shared with me their knowledge related to it: Paco Guardeño, Rosa Ibáñez, Juan José Pujadas, Maribel Ramos, Antonio Sanchis Pallarés. And many more.

The main fieldwork period 1994–1995 was financed by Swedish Council for Planning and Coordination of Research (Forskningsrådsnämnden). The fieldwork in 2002–2003 was financed by the foundation Magnus Bergvalls Stiftelse, Stockholm. Most of the analysis was done while I was working as an associate professor at the Department of Social Anthropology, Stockholm University, and most of the actual writing during summer vacations and as a professor of gender studies at the Centre for Women’s Studies, Umeå University and at the Forum for Gender Studies, Mid-Sweden University.

Finally, as always, my deepest gratitude to my mother and sister for constant help and support, and to my sons, Jaime and Joaquin, for being the unusual persons they are and for being my best conversation partners. My mother is no longer around to read this book, so I dedicate it to her memory.
